Kenneth J. Alford, whose real name is Frederick J. Ricketts (1881-1945), was known as the British March King. The four marches in this collection include his most famous march, Colonel Bogey. It was used in the Academy Award-winning film Bridge on the River Kwai. This collection is made up of complete study scores based on the original published parts. It was common practice following the turn of the century for marches to be published without scores with a single part used as a type of score. It was also common for there to be many inconsistencies between parts (articulations, phrasings, dynamics). These scores contain the inconsistencies so a conductor can know exactly what the players are reading when the original parts are used.
