It is in the context of the two World Wars of the Twentieth century that the model of Total War is found. In the context of this dissertation it is useful to consider a concept of Total War in the terms alluded to earlier in the first chapter. In the same way that "modern war is the product of three distinct kinds of change: administrative, technical, and ideological" (Townshend 2005:3), Total War is then the combination of these factors in their uppermost capacity.
